

Items That Will Help Speed Your Evaluation & Appeal

Have you been denied and need help with your Social Security Disability appeal? The more information you have handy or are prepared to discuss, the faster we can determine if Allsup can assist you with your appeal.

- Initial claim details. This includes the location (state) where you filed your application and if you had representation or someone help you file for benefits.
- Date of your denial and/or your appeal deadline
- Your employment history, including organizations you worked for over the past 15 years, the dates you worked for them and your earnings while there.
- Your medical diagnosis
- Type(s) of doctor(s) whom you see, including specialists' names and phone numbers, and dates of last visit(s)
- Hospital or medical center where you have received treatment
- How long your condition has kept you from working and dates of any attempts to return to work
- General list of restrictions/limitations your doctor discussed with you
- List of prescriptions/medications to treat your condition
- Any workers' compensation, state disability, SSA retirement, unemployment benefits or long-term disability information (if applicable) you are receiving
- Date and information about your most recent denial (if you have already applied and been turned down for SSDI)
- Veteran status
- Monies owed: back taxes, child support, student loans in default or bankruptcy that have not been discharged
